In the routine screening of drugs of abuse in blood and urine specimens for law enforcement and laboratory analysts, enzymatic hydrolysis of benzoylecgonine (BE) and other alkaloids are typically required to provide the parent drug and its metabolites for quantitation. In addition, other alkaloids are often present. The alkaloids require a variety of separation and purification methods before they can be analyzed. Most of these methods utilize liquid chromatography for a variety of different reasons, with most of these methods being limited to analysis of only one alkaloid. Current methods are less than ideal in terms of speed and convenience of use, sample clean-up and ability to determine multiple alkaloids. The introduction of solid-phase extraction (SPE) technology provided a way to perform rapid, efficient sample clean-up and offer greater sensitivity and accuracy. The technique was first developed in the early 1980's (Muller, J. et al., J. Anal. Toxic. 1986, 10(1), 15-19) and first utilized in the illicit drug field by Kodak in 1993 (Selten, A. et al
