Semiconductor devices such as logic and memory

devices are typically fabricated by a sequence of processing steps applied to a specimen. The various features and multiple structural levels of the semiconductor devices are formed by these processing steps. For example, lithography among others is one semiconductor fabrication process that involves forming a pattern on a semiconductor substrate. Additional examples of semiconductor fabrication processes include, but are not limited to, chemical-mechanical polishing, etch, deposition, and ion implantation. Multiple semiconductor devices may be fabricated on a single semiconductor wafer and then separated into individual semiconductor devices. Inspection processes are used at various steps during a semiconductor manufacturing process to detect defects on wafers to promote higher yield in the manufacturing process and thus higher profits. As design rules and process dimensions are reduced and semiconductor devices are more densely packaged, inspection processes have become important to the success of semiconductor manufacturing. For example, inspection processes are used to detect defects on wafers prior to performing bonding and packaging operations, and to analyze characteristics of the completed wafer or die. One such inspection system is a bright-field inspection system. Bright-field inspection systems illuminate the surface of the specimen with bright light and detect scattered light emitted from the specimen. Bright-field inspection systems may include an illumination system, which includes one or more illumination sources which illuminate a surface of the specimen. Any light not scattered by features of the surface of the specimen is scattered by structures in the illumination system. Q: iPhone - How to send data from one class to another I'm going through different tutorials, websites and developer documentation, but I still have some questions regarding this: I have created an UIViewController which loads from a nib file. But what is the standard approach to allow the ViewController to send a message to a class in my app, which is created in the MainWindow.xib? I'm not talking about navigation, I'm talking about sending data to a class in the MainWindow.xib. [NSThread detachNewThreadSelector:@selector(show) toTarget:self withObject:nil]; I did this the tutorial, but it just doesn't show the data in the ViewController. What should I do? Thanks

A: If you want to send data to a class that is created in the MainWindow.xib, the approach you are using can be rewritten like this: MainWindow *myMainWindow = [[MainWindow alloc]init]; [self presentModalViewController:myMainWindow animated:YES]; [myMainWindow release]; EDIT: This method is ok if you want to present in this way only one view controller. But if you want to use it many times you should use instead the following method: SomeViewController *vc = [[SomeViewController alloc]init]; [self presentModalViewController:vc animated:YES]; [vc release];

A pilot study assessing the effect of a school-based home-visit program on non-adherence in an inner-city population. A randomized controlled pilot study was conducted to assess the efficacy of a school-based home-visit program on non-adherence to prescribed medications in a low-income, inner-city population. Of the 130 children randomly assigned to intervention (n = 65) or control groups (n = 65), 16 children were lost to follow-up. No significant differences were observed between the intervention and control groups in terms of demographic variables, psychosocial characteristics, and duration of illness prior to enrollment in the study. After 6 months of treatment, no significant differences were found between the two groups in terms of non-adherence to their medications. Despite the small size of the study and the low retention rate, it appears that a school-based home-visit program is unlikely to affect adherence in a population of inner-city
