The following information was share with me at the time of streaming. The game world This game is an "open world" RPG. You can freely walk around the world and go to dungeons. In this game, each area has an "overworld," which is a feature similar to "instanced worlds." However, in contrast to "instanced worlds," the overworld areas can be freely entered and exited. Also, unlike "instanced worlds," when you go into the overworld, you can freely move around freely. Also, unlike "instanced worlds," there is no lockout. If you get caught in an "instanced world" by changing the map, you can easily be captured by a monster. For this reason, it is difficult to implement such a feature. The world map is a three-dimensional map that is four times as large as the old world map. The map is automatically updated, so there is no need to display such a large world map in real time. In this game, it is possible to freely move around in the overworld

The social scientists — economist Shyam Saran, historian Irfan Habib, and Javed Iqbal, an expert in public administration — faced this situation after the Parliamentary Board denied the facility of their participation in the Rajya Sabha-Centre committee. The members of this committee, which is headed by Lok Sabha Speaker Sumitra Mahajan, consider both the views — those of the Parliamentary Standing Committee as well as those of the group of social scientists. The Parliamentary Standing Committee had on August 4 last year submitted a report which said, while the paperless public distribution system can reduce leakages, an Aadhaar link is essential to identify beneficiaries and weed out fake cases. It had also identified certain villages in Haryana and western Uttar Pradesh and identified that there is no concrete, unique identification system for beneficiaries in the said villages. The Standing Committee also said that it is impossible to conduct a large scale social experiment and as such it is impossible to come up with a transparent system to link Aadhaar with its beneficiaries. It said that an Aadhaar card is mandatory for the welfare of the people and it may not be desirable that people with access to Aadhaar card do not suffer from hunger. Saran, who had presented the same arguments in a rather emotional manner, was at the Centre as an expert while Habib and Iqbal had been given the status of
