Meow-Jong is a modern take on the classic puzzle game Mahjong Solitaire, but with cats! Play it on every Android device! Over 100 boards! Use your feline reflexes for fun! Undo your last moves! Hints on the bottoms of boards! Test your skills! The invention is an apparatus which is capable of producing both continuous and pulsed microwave radiation. The apparatus which is the subject of the present invention is capable of producing a wide bandwidth of microwave radiation and a compactness which is not available with conventional continuous wave sources such as the magnetrons. The invention is not limited to the application of microwave sources to frequency conversion apparatus, but the invention is capable of producing an RF signal output in a single-tube microwave cavity amplifier of conventional type. The overall trend in communications technology has been to miniaturize both the equipment used to produce a communication signal and the equipment used to receive or decode the communication signal. Such miniaturization is especially true of the equipment used for radio-frequency (RF) communication. Many of the most promising means for meeting this need are by-pass capacitors, in which the capacitance is concentrated into a small area as opposed to the more widespread technology of surface mount devices. By-pass capacitors have significant advantages in reduced size, in operation power, in longevity, and in insulation materials. However, there is a constant trend in miniaturizing communications equipment towards a greater signal energy capacity which can only be accomplished by power and therefore size increase. However, the size of power supplies have not scaled in keeping with communications equipment size. The power scaling problem and the limited size of presently available solid state power supplies thus presents a major stumbling block to the miniaturization of communications equipment. By providing a source of coherent broadband RF radiation, the invention of the present invention, while not itself a power supply, provides the source of coherent radiation through either a micro-machined diode or a diode array to a loading capacitor which is at least as small as the diode.Q: Change auto generated accessor to specific type I am using Auto generated accessors and serializing Core Data objects, but my objects in one of the two models contain an NSString. I can change the model configuration to add the generated accessor for this NSString, but then I have to use a new name. I have created a cookie for the main domain, named auth that contains the the login cookie. It seems to be ok, as I can login to both sites without issues. Here's what I have set in my settings.py for this to work: SESSION_COOKIE_DOMAIN = '.example.com' SESSION_COOKIE_NAME = 'auth' I have also added the correct subdomain to the SESSION_COOKIE_DOMAIN setting. But it seems to not work, as once logged in, the site will render properly, but cookies are not shared. A cookie for the main site will be created, but not the one for the sub-site. And, oddly enough, I cannot figure out why this cookie doesn't exist. The cookie is set with the same user id I am running the login session with. Any thoughts on this? A: See RFC 2109, section 3.7 If the domain and/or path attribute values of the cookie are empty strings, then the cookie is a Session Cookie for the sub-domain and sub-path. Otherwise, the cookie is a Domain Cookie for the domain. The domain attribute specifies the top-level domain for which the cookie is valid; the path attribute specifies a path for which the cookie is valid. Both attributes are optional. Q: How to replace bits in an integer literal? I am trying to create a bit mask for the endianness of a byte in an integer literal. This is what I have so far: uint32_t endian_bitmask = (uint c9d1549cdd

The Chronicles of Amber. The Book of the New Sun. Thrice-greatest series on all of my shelves. Then the Gap chose to put out a prequel series, before those. Called the Warhammer 40,000 fiction or the Dark Age of Camelot series that's canon. It was awful, the prequels make the originals even better. And now we find out someone started a Shadow of the Empire. I'm going to do a review here as it's very close to the type of story I like to read, and also on the middle of my emotional spectrum when it comes to this. Let's get to it then. I'm going to assume you've seen the new trailer for this, so we can skip the repetitive parts. And if I skip any of the major ones from the previous ones, you know why I skipped them. Now.. get ready. Well, you've seen the start of the story, and we have a full trailer for you. Basically how it goes, we have a Messenger of Astaria, that is summoned to a planet called Khir'ai. I won't give the entire premise, but it's as simple as a planet of orcs, and the emperor or queen is dead. Each person around him gets a vision and then tries to give him a message. It serves as the beginning of the story line, but it won't be until a bit later that the Messenger really makes his way across the galaxy. Now, as I already mentioned, this is the type of story where I can connect with the story with most people. I don't believe any kind of racism or stuff. And thus, our main character, at least in his initial reading, comes off a bit like Jack Sparrow of Pirates of the Carribean. I love the St. John's series and I feel like there are so many times that central character more fits the "I'm going to hate on this guy, but honestly he's a great main character" sort of situation. Even on a 10 out of 10 scale, Sparrow still feels like a character that I don't sympathize with - if he's good, then I'm gonna like him, but if he's bad, I might not really like him. However, that's not true with the character in this. He starts off a bit horrible, in my mind, then starts quite slowly to get better. The characters themselves are fine. Really the only one I wish he stayed on
