Fluoride release from amalgam restorations in a specially designed environment. An in vitro model of human periodontal cells in direct contact with amalgam was used to study the release of fluoride from the polymerization resins used to set and repair amalgam restorations. Specimens of amalgam used to repair the cervical areas of resin-bonded fixed partial dentures were removed at intervals after they were placed. Extracts were analyzed for fluoride, mercury, and chrome by atomic absorption spectrometry. Results indicated that the release of fluoride was greater in the presence of the organic matrix produced from the polymerization resins than in the absence of the organic matrix. The in vitro release of fluoride from the amalgam was determined in specimens of amalgam that were either single or multiple restorations. The in vivo release of fluoride from resin-bonded amalgam restorations placed in the human mouth for several months has not been studied.
